New essays from the Atheist Camel offer readers ironic, humorous ammunition against religion

“The Atheist Camel Rants Again!”* by Bart Centre provides atheists and agnostics with sure-fire arguments against religious deception

ALSTEAD, N.H. – “The Atheist Camel Rants Again!” (ISBN 1460933915), a collection of short diatribes by Bart Centre, features 100 new essays of topical insight that seek to uncover the contradictions of religious teaching.

Writing again as his alter-ego Dromedary Hump, Centre’s sequel to his popular collection, “The Atheist Camel Chronicles,” again features his sharp but humorous perspective on religion in contemporary society. From circumcision controversy to gay marriage to exorcism, the author takes on organized religion and its adherents, seeking to reveal all of the surrounding absurdity. The collected essays are drawn from the best posts on the author’s Atheist Camel blog.

“At a time when religious fundamentalism threatens world peace and our own security, agnostics and closeted atheists need to stop sitting on the fence,” says Centre. “This book is ammunition against the misinformation and proselytizing of the religious.”

The author weaves personal narrative with current events and philosophical insight, all mixed with satire, sarcasm and humor to provide an enjoyable learning experience. Intended to engage, inspire and amuse, the book is appropriate for a broad range of readers.

“The Atheist Camel Rants Again!” is available for sale online at Amazon.com and other channels.
